During January, European credit markets experienced a negative performance (H9PC Index - 1.45%), in tandem with the movement of the Eurostoxx 50 (-2.88%) and S&P 500 (-5.26%). COVID-19 cases were still high around the world but pressure on hospital were diminishing, with several European country lifting quarantine period and restrictions. Significant increase in inventories was one of the main driver of US 6.9% QoQ GDP growth in 4Q2021, while 1Q22 should be significantly lower at just 1.5%. After a strong third quarter, growth in Europe moderate to 0.3% QoQ, with only a modest 2% forecasted for 1Q22. On the other side inflation continued its march higher: core inflation in US reached 5.5% with no suggestion in details of a future slowing, while in Europe it reached the 2.6% YoY. FOMC commented strength in job market and strong inflation, supporting the case for a 25bps hike in March, with market speculating about a possible double hike of 50bps at next meeting: cumulatively FED forecasted three hikes in 2022, with three more in 2023 and another two in 2024. Markets will wait for the ECB reaction at February meeting, even if significant movement could materialize only at March meeting, when new staff projections will be available. In this context, the 10 years bund yield was higher at +0.01% (+19bps in the month, above zero for the first time since 2019), in tandem with the 10 years Treasury at 1.78% (+27bps in the month). The movement in rates had significant impact on markets, especially on the tech sector in US, with NASDAQ index loosing close to 9% during the month. Increasing tension between Russia and Ukraine supported oil that started the year on a positive note, closing the month at 91 USD per barrel (+17% MoM). Funds offers attractive returns for 2022, even if market volatility could persist in the first half of the year.
